

Vicki Arroyo is the Executive Director of the newly launched Georgetown State and Federal Climate Resource Center housed at Georgetown University Law Center where she is also a Visiting Professor. She previously served at the Pew Center on Global Climate Change, most recently as the Pew Center's Vice President, Domestic Policy and General Counsel. Since 1998, she directed the Center's domestic program, overseeing analysis of climate change's environmental impacts, economics, and domestic policy issues, and served as Managing Editor of the Center's book. She has taught courses on environmental policy and climate change at Catholic University, George Mason University's graduate public policy program, and Tulane Law School. Previously, she practiced environmental law with Kilpatrick Stockton and served in two offices at U.S. EPA: the Office of Air and Radiation and the Office of Research and Development where she reviewed development of standards under the Clean Air Act. From 1988 - 1991, she created and directed the Louisiana Department of Environmental Quality's policy office, and briefly served as Governor Buddy Roemer's environmental advisor. She holds a B.S. in biology, Magna Cum Laude, from Emory; a Masters of Public Administration from Harvard (top honors in program), and a J.D., Magna Cum Laude, from Georgetown, where she was Editor-in-Chief of The Georgetown International Environmental Law Review
